on the Gastric and enteric States of fever. —

The pulse in both these states of fever is small, tense or typhoid when none of the adjoining viscera are affected.

The remedies for both should be copious bleeding, and all those means for discharging or blunting acrid & poisonous matters in the stomach which were formerly mentioned.

Dr Baile has remarked in his Medical Anatomy that an inflammation in the stomach seldom terminates in suppuration or gangrene. He further remarks that an inflammation of the peritoneum which covers the abdominal muscles is limited to itself, but when inflammation affects that part of the peritoneum which covers the bowels, it extends to their muscular and formerly in pointing out the difference between continuous & contiguous sympathy. —

Schirri occurs often and Baile tells us in the large, than in the small intestines. We discovered bone in several of the intestines. It would seem that every part of the body is bone and then puts on this bone secreting process. —
